Entry 03 of 40, 4th year male student

Being university students, tasks such as assignments and projects with a timed deadline are very common. However, most university students will delay until the last minute to do and hand in their work, despite regretting it every time.

One interpretation of this senryu is the feeling of panic and helplessness that a student would face when one HAS to do it as the deadline is literally hours away. However, one can also interpret the verses to show that the student does not care about the looming deadline via intonation. This conflict of feelings is what I wanted to capture in this senryu.

The photo of the messy table with a dim lighting tries to capture the attempt of the student rushing the assignment. The earphones connected to the computer, however, suggests a not very productive work session.

The complete result of all contests are as follows:
